Diamond Cluster Solitaires

The Innovation of the Century in the Setting of Fine Diamonds

Illustrations Actual Size

The Diamond Chister Solitaire is composed of nine carefully chosen white and very brilliant diamonds-set as a single stone, with small, though very strong, platinum divisions. The rest of the mounting is 14-carat solid gold. The effect is just as striking and much resembles a solitaire diamond about 214 carats in size.

Germany's Plans For New Territories, Coaling Stations and Indemnities. Coaling Stations and Indemnities. All through that eventful August and September Wangenheim continued his almost irresponsible behavior—now blandly boantful, now depressed, always nervous and high strung, ingratiating to an American like myself, spiteful and petty toward the representatives of the enemy powers. He was always displaying his anxiety and impatience by sitting on the beach, that he might be within two or three minutes' quicker access to the wireless communications that were sent him from Berlin via the Corcovado. He would never miss an opportunity to apread the news of victories; several times he adopted the unusual course of coming to my miration for England and, especially for America. "There are only three great countries." he would say over and over again. "Germany, England and the United States. We three should get together; then we could rule the world." This enthusiasm for the British empire now suddenly cooled when that power decided to defend her treaty pledges and declared war. Wangenheim had tailed that the conflict would be a short one and that Sedan day would be celebrated in Parts. But on Aug. 5 I called at his embassy and found him more than usually agitated and serious. Baroness Wangenheim a tail, handsome woman, was sitting in the room reading her mother's memotre of the war of 1879. Both regarded the news from England as almost a personal griovance, and what impressed memons was Wangenheim's utter failure to understand England's motives. "It's mighty poor polities of her part." he exclaimed over and over again, it's attitude was precisely the same as that of Bethmann-Hollweg with the "scrap of paper."

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE FOOTBALL.

as good a football as any squirrel, or rabbit, or mapsy dog boy could want "Come on, play football with us; cried Sandole Littletall "All right, I will Wait until I get my fall, silk hat," spoke the bunny "Oh, you won't need that" harked Jackle Bow Wow, the puppy dog boy, laughing And, surely enough, Uncle Wiggilly didn't. For, when he went out to play football with the animal boys and knocked the blown-up squash all around the field, the first thing which haptened was that his tall silk hat was knocked off and sent spinning under a backberry bush. "I guess I'll play without it," said the bunny and he did.

He was having lots of fun with the football, when all of a sudden Mr. Longears, after giving an extra bard kick to the ball, cried; "Oh, my eye! Oh, a big chunk of dirt blew in my eye and I can't see to play any more."

"That's too bad, "said Jimmie Wibblewoble, the duck, "Jat's get the dirt out of Uncle Wiggly's eye so he can see to play football with us," he said to the others.

CHAPTER NO. 5.

HAUNTED.

Curiously enough, that same evening a poor little drab of the streets spoke to Fred. It never had happened before. He hatel it. In a different mood, be might have just taken it as a sort of badge, a sign of the unquestionable at talment of manhood, and accordingly been secretly flattered. He was perfectly human. He was no saint. But as it was, the thing came too soon after Elizabeth's sweet kies.

Though perhaps it was that very air—the look of one just touched by rosy flame—that had drawn the poor little moth toward him so irresistibly.

It happened beneath his heels. Definite dielike of her surged in him. With her touch she had is like of her surged in him. With her touch she had so her touch she had so had been to his one thoughts he was perfectly human. He was no saint. But as it was, the thing came too soon after Elizabeth's sweet kies.

"Poor little crastings in both in moth soon it had so he had is mother—in time. "Poor little crastings" how her had is id. "they don't know any better." And soi. "No—no. thank you," said Frederick, beyeld her hove and what he said tightened her throat somehow. She didn't know why. But she tried to swagger, to sneer.

"My Gawd," she said. "you're awful polite!"

He looked at her one moment before he turned to go. He raised his hat. "I—meant to be," asaid.

She had to dash the tears from her every with the back of a grimy paw. She didn't guess it was the hiss of an-
